A toxic spill for practice

Preparing for

Disaster in Upland

It was a drill, but the Upland accident had all the looks of the real thing.

Damaged vehicles; bloodied victims; and confusion. The unknown element, though, was the presence of a toxic material.

Reality, or the closest thing to it, was what the Upland Fire Department wanted for its annual emergency disaster drill.

The Upland Fire Department, San Antonio Community Hospital, Disposal Control Service, Upland Police Department, Canyon Ambulance and Trans Medical Inc. conducted their first accident drill involving a toxic spill near Memorial Park.

Supporting agencies were the Foothill Fire Protection District; Ontario Police Department; San Bernardino County Communications Center; and the Toxic Center in Los Angeles.

The agencies conducted three separate drills last week in order to involve as many emergency personnel as possible. The accident scenario was the same in each case, but a different toxic material was used so personnel could have more experience working with different chemicals, according to Pete Bryan, division chief in charge of training.

When emergency personnel arrived on the makeshift scene, they found two passenger cars had struck a large tanker. An unidentified material was seeping out of the truck and oozing slowly into a nearby wash area off Foothill Boulevard Tuesday.

Four victims, including a pregnant woman, were in one car. Three others were in the car next to the spill area and another three were traveling in the truck.

Emergency personnel were given basic information about the situation. Personnel were trained extensively before the drill and were expected to use that knowledge during the incident.

Fire and police personnel first surveyed the accident scene and then cordoned off the area.

Upland Police Lt. Robert Beringer said people from an area within a one-mile radius from the accident were evacuated.

The big job was determining what type of chemical firefighters were facing.

Tony Petrone of RACES, a local amateur radio club, contacted the Toxic Center in Los Angeles on the radio. Upland Fire Capt. Joel Cascadden then relayed information about the accident to the center.

With the help of the center, firefighters determined they were working with parathion, a pesticide which can be extremely toxic in large dosages.

Firefighters wearing portable air masks rescued the injured passengers, following instructions from the toxic center to wash the victims with soap and water before taking them to a decontamination area roped off in Memorial Park.

Disposal Control Service personnel then worked with firefighters to contain the spill. Dressed in specially-designed protective suits, they vacuumed up the liquid into disposal trucks.

The injured were cared for at the site and then transferred to San Antonio hospital. Hospital personnel then were given an opportunity to conduct their own medical drills at the facility.

Hal Nardell, hospital director of general services, said San Antonio personnel conduct disaster drills twice a year. The Upland toxic drill, though, was the hospital's first emergency exercise of that type.

Hospital personnel portrayed accident victims. Nardell said portraying victims gave personnel an idea of what emergency workers have to contend with at an accident scene.

"We had some delays but I think that mainly is because it was our first field drill with hazardous materials," Bryan said. "We wanted the drill to be a learning tool. Firefighters have had a lot of classroom instruction concerning toxic materials. There have been joint classes between the fire and police departments and the hospital and ambulance companies. The idea of the drill was to work together."

Vu Quant Loc is grateful his family has prospered during the past 10 years. With the sponsorship of two Upland families, the former Vietnam refugees are doing well. Vu enjoys his Upland home with his wife, children and grandchildren.

What a difference 10 years makes for refugee family

By Suzanne Sproul

Lots of hard work and determination have paid off for the Vu Quant Loc family of Upland.

Ten years ago the family fled Vietnam and faced an uncertain future in America.

What a difference time makes. The one-time refugee family now owns three homes and operates two businesses.

They started their new lives in Camp Pendleton learning English during evening classes.

Nelson and Maggie Lacrosse and Roy and Jo Keeran of Upland, though, wanted to help more. The Lacrosses and Keerans sponsored the Vus (Vietnamese families use their last names first) and it's been a family affair ever since. The "family" two weeks ago celebrated 10 years of hard work and accomplishments at the Keeran home.

"It was beautiful. Very nice," Vu said in broken English but with a big smile. "Nelson is a very good man and sponsor. They had a sign that show our 10-year ceremony."

Ngoc-Bich Huynh, Vu's eldest married daughter, agreed the party was lovely.

"The reunion was just beautiful. The party was just like one they gave us 10 years ago with music and everything," Huynh said.

The Vu family moved in with the Lacrosses when they were first sponsored, staying in the Upland home for three months.

"We had six in our family already. The big jobs were teaching them English and finding them jobs. It was a time-consuming task but really worth it," Mrs. Lacrosse said. "We gained another family."

Vu worked as a dishwasher at a local restaurant when he first came to the West Valley, but soon decided he needed a more permanent profession.

He turned to the past, remembering when he was at Camp Pendleton and a soldier lent him a hair clipper so he could give 10-cent haircuts until he earned enough money to buy his own clippers.

But when he looked for a barber's job in the West Valley he was told he needed a license.

Mrs. Lacrosse had to drive him to Long Beach to sign up for barber school, and then to a barbers' school in San Bernardino, until Vu got his own driver's license and could make the daily trip to class alone.

"He wanted to be a barber no matter what," Lacrosse said with a big laugh. "And he made it."

Vu now owns the Cucamonga Barber Shop. His daughter, Bich (pronounced Bik), also owns a barber/styling shop, the Top Hat Barber Shop in Ontario.

The rest of the family also has done well: one daughter is finishing up her nurse's training; another daughter is the senior records official at Chaffey College; two sons are engineers; another son is studying computer science at Chaffey College; and the youngest son still is at Chaffey High School.

But no one of the family wants praise. They admit it has taken a lot of dedication and hard work. Vu said the family owes everything to the Lacrosses and Keerans.

"We appreciate our sponsors," he said.

"I'm his brother, Loc tells me. He won't let either of us go to any other barber. They're family now," Lacrosse said about the Vus.

Uplander to be featured in Seventeen magazine

By Suzanne Sproul

Upland's Anne D'Arcangelo didn't make the cover of the October Seventeen magazine issue. Instead she will be featured in a spread about physical fitness and hair care.

D'Arcangelo competed with 82,000 girls, ages 13 through 21, in the popular magazine's annual cover girl contest. She was one of eight finalists.

Chandra Zinn of Morgan Hill was selected cover girl, Murfy Alexander said. Alexander is Seventeen magazine's public relations director.

D'Arcangelo and Zinn represented The Broadway store of Los Angeles.

The Upland High School sophomore will be featured along with other finalists in a 13-page section of the issue. The October issue will be on newstands the end of this week.

The 15-year-old D'Arcangelo flew to New York this summer for a four-day photographic session.

"In selecting the eight finalists who would come to New York for the four days of photo sessions, we were looking for young women who project a real freshness and verve when they get in front of the camera. Anne's photos definitely have that special something that makes them come alive on a page," said Midge Richardson, Seventeen's editor-in-chief in a news release.

D'Arcangelo has said she is interested in modeling part-time, at least until she goes to college. She recently completed a back-to-school advertising assignment for The Broadway.

She said she hoped to win the coveted title, but if she didn't it "was a lot of fun."

"We try to give the eight finalists a realistic glimpse of what modeling in New York is like. We arrange for them to work with the top makeup and hair stylists and photographers, as well as set up assignments that are identical to what we'd give a professional model in New York," Richardson said in the same release.

R.C. residents satisfied with fly expert's report

A consultant hired by the Rancho Cucamonga City Council has reported that preliminary survey and inspection aimed at eventually eradicating swarms of flies from the city, should be complete by December.

Those who have been victimized by the pests are satisfied with the report by Gene Zdunowski, a fly eradication expert.

He told the City Council this week that he has been working for one month in the city doing a survey of the fly species that are most prevalent because different kinds breed at different times.

He said the flies plaguing some Rancho Cucamonga neighborhoods appear to be the kind that lay their eggs in October, with the new flies emerging in January and February. He said those flies then lay more eggs which hatch in April, May and June.

Zdunowski said he has begun his inspection of local poultry farms with a visit to Moss Farms, one of the largest in Rancho Cucamonga.

Although he said the farm was in excellent condition for preventing fly breeding, the owner has agreed to subscribe to a service for wasp-like fly parasites.

"By Decemember all of the ranches will have been inspected two times and we will have the survey for the council," he said.

He said the more difficult task will be to provide inspections of property owned by the general public in a door-to-door sweep of troubled areas.

The city is paying Zdunowski $50 an hour, total cost not to exceed $15,000.

The consultant said his next report to the council would be in six weeks.

Zdunowski's report was satisfying to Kathy Wheatley, one of the Rancho Cucamonga residents whose complaints of the infestation led to the council action.

She said she and her neighbors have met twice with Zdunowski.

"We will find out in April or May how it's worked," she said. "He seemed to be able to address all of our concerns."

A low-key approach and experience in large developments has spelled success for Joe Dilorio who was instrumental in Rancho Cucamonga's Victoria planned community.

Builder seeking to upgrade image of West Valley towns

By Patrick McGreevy

When Rancho Cucamonga planners think of the concept of planned communities, one of the developers that comes to mind is Joe Dilorio.

Dilorio does not live in one of the modern neighborhoods he is responsible for. Instead he lives and works out of a large, traditional wooden house on Foothill Boulevard west of Haven Avenue in Rancho Cucamonga that may seem out of place among nearby steel and glass office buildings and sprawling industrial plants.

Dilorio recently stood at one of his large oak tables among furnishings that evoked another era and talked about the future.

"The planned community is going to set the character of the city," he said. "People hate the term 'The Irvine of the Foothills' but we're at least as close to the quality of Irvine as any area.

"People, 10 years ago spoke of it as the Rancho Cucamonga of Jack Benny's jokes. Now it's spoken of in a much higher tone.

"That's what we're doing. We're changing the image of the city. And not just Rancho Cucamonga. That's what we're trying to do in Fontana also," he said.

Dilorio is a believer in the ability of planned communities to improve the standard of living in an area.

The belief found its way into his mind while he was earning his bachelor's degree in architecture and master's of business administration in Maryland.

The east coast of 25 years ago was the birthplace of the planned community concept, and Dilorio cut his teeth on some of the prototype projects while still a student.

He came to California in 1969 working in the land holding division of Transamerica. Later Dilorio ran a large real estate purchasing and holding office for ITT.

At one point, the corporation gave him $30 million to invest in California land. In seeking every deal he could, he discovered the potential for the West Valley.

"You don't have to be a student of geography to know that a vast majority of the land that should and would be developed is along the stretch of foothills from Glendora to San Bernardino," he said.

In the mid-1970s, Dilorio became involved in what today is known as the Victoria planned community.

He did land negotiations and planning for Victoria, but later the William Lyon Co. took over the residential development of

Few minor changes in rent control law

By Suzanne Sproul

With a few minor changes, Upland's proposed rent control ordinance should stand up in court, says City Attorney Don Maroney.

The City Council three weeks ago instructed Maroney to review the proposal, particularly because of a recent state Supreme Court decision against a Westminster rent control ordinance.

The court ruled the Orange County city placed too much authority into the hands of an arbitrator to handle rent disputes. The proposed Upland ordinance relies exclusively on the use of an arbitrator.

Recently Maroney recommended several minor changes to the document.

The changes involve factors to be used to determine rents and a provision to allow for a City Council review of an arbitrator's decision if tenants or owners request it.

Mayor Richard Anderson asked Maroney to prepare the proposal for the council's review Sept. 30. If the council approves the ordinance during the meeting, a public hearing will be scheduled.

Councilman Frank Carpenter again has expressed concern about having an ordinance which would stand up in court.

Carpenter said he will continue to oppose any measure which might land the city in court.

The court said the Westminster ordinance didn't allow for a City Council review. If tenants or park owners wanted to challenge the arbitrator's decision, their only recourse would be to go to court, Maroney said.

The proposed Upland ordinance doesn't contain any mention of a council review, either. Maroney said he will add that provision to the document.

Originally the council considered using a seven-member citizen commission to handle disputes. Instead the council voted to have arbitrators assume the authority and responsibility.

The current proposed ordinance would first allow tenants and park owners to have "meet and confer" sessions in hopes of solving any problems. If the sessions fail, either party then could ask for an arbitrator.

Tenants and owners would share the cost of arbitration.

Historic sites in R.C. tabbed for possible preservation

By Patrick McGreevy

The first step has been taken by the Rancho Cucamonga City Council towards compiling a survey of all of the city's historically significant sites for protection.

After heavy lobbying from local historians, the City Council agreed Sept. 18 to allow the city's Historic Preservation Commission to solicit proposals for a survey of the city's historic sites.

Council members, however, were reluctant to transfer money into an account for the survey until they hear the proposals and the commission's recommendation.

Mayor Jon Mikels brought the matter up, saying the city needs to locate and itemize those structures and features that are historically significant and therefore should be preserved.

"The inventory will be a valuable resource for the commission and all segments of the city government," said Melicent Arner, chairwoman of the commission. She told the council that the entire city needs to be surveyed at one time, rather than have the commission look at each site as it becomes the focus of development.

The commission's vice chairwoman, Marsha Banks, said that an atlas of historically significant sites and potentially historical sites would prevent incidents in which developers are given approval by the planning department without consideration of the development's affect on a historical site.

As examples, she pointed to the Terra Vista development plan approved without recognizing the historical significance of an old bunkhouse for workers at the Mission Winery. She also pointed to recent action on historically significant trees on Victoria Avenue and a 40-year-old Santa Fe Railroad depot.

She added that historical surveys of all California historical sites now are required "Above and beyond the legal mandate, the city needs a historical survey," she said.

But councilmen Jeff King and Chuck Buquet said they felt uncomfortable budgeting money now for the survey.

Originally, City Manager Lauren Wasserman had said up to $15,000 was available to hire a consultant to do the work but Mayor Mikels said last week that $9,500 was all the city could offer.

Planned traffic changes met with concern

By Suzanne Sproul

Major property owners in Upland's Seventh Street/Mountain Avenue redevelopment project are concerned changes in the city's traffic circulation pattern in that area may harm business.

Redevelopment discussions came after the council reviewed four amendments to the city's circulation element of the general land use plan.

The council approved the following changes:

- The realignment of Seventh Street between San Antonio and Mountain avenues. The change would have Seventh Street, an east-west thoroughfare, veer north near Alexander Avenue, loop behind an existing Ole's Home Center and turn west until it leads into Mountain Green Center at Mountain Avenue.
- The addition of a 10-foot dedication on the east side of Mountain Avenue between the south city limit and Foothill Boulevard. Ultimately the city wants to make Mountain Avenue a six-lane road.
- The amendment of the Benson Avenue design with an additional 9-foot dedication between 16th and 19th streets to include a bikeway. The city already has a bike path north of 19th Street. The amendment would allow the path to be constructed along the west side of the street.

• The amendment of the Mountain Avenue design from 23rd Street to the north city limit by the deletion of a planned median island.

Representatives from Ole's, Miller's Outpost, Chevron and Texaco told the City Council they were very interested in the development plans in that southern section of the city.

They said the proposed realigning of Seventh Street within the redevelopment project site could rob the companies of business.

Jim Houghton, representing Ole's, said his company opposed the Seventh Street change. The street closure would "severely curtail" customer access to the Mountain Avenue store, he said.

Other company representatives said they couldn't say they opposed the change until they knew what the city's redevelopment plans were for the area.

But resident Charles McMahill of nearby Alexander Avenue said the Seventh Street change possibly could affect his property evaluation. He also expressed concern about what the city proposes for the redevelopment area.

Mayor Richard Anderson told company representatives and McMahill that although the city has received several project proposals from private industry none to date have been accepted. When city officials believe they have workable project ideas, public hearings for the redevelopment site will be scheduled, the mayor said.

The realignment of Seventh Street is a direct result of the goal of the redevelopment project in the area to help eliminate traffic congestion along Seventh Street and Mountain Avenue, a problem cited by consultants.

City Engineer Fred Blanchard said a key reason for Mountain Avenue congestion at Seventh Street is because of the proximity of the intersection's traffic signal to a San Bernardino Freeway onramp.

Although the council approved realigning Seventh Street, no specific redesign proposal was accepted. The council said a specific design would be adopted when further redevelopment plans are made.

most of the property and Dilorio split off 250 acres today known as the Caryn planned community.

He moved his legal address to Rancho Cucamonga in 1976, although he still maintains a second home in Laguna Beach. He was instrumental in the city's incorporation in 1977 and he is one of 50 Rancho Cucamonga residents who received founders plaques.

Besides being president of the Caryn Co., Dilorio is a managing partner in B.D. Investors, a partnership with Richard Barkley and the community development department of the city of Fontana.

B.D. Investments is developing an 890-acre site with housing, office and commercial buildings, a medical center and an industrial park in Fontana.

He is also a partner in Foothill Associates, which along with the Hahn Co., Broadway and May Co., is developing Rancho Cucamonga's regional shopping center.

Dilorio says he was part of the original deal-making team but is now more of a silent partner as experts in shopping mall planning and marketing have taken over the preparatory work.

He is also a principal in California Vintage, a development of single-family detached homes near Milliken and Highland avenues that he annexed into the city of Rancho Cucamonga.

He has served on the board of directors of the Rancho Cucamonga Chamber of Commerce where he chaired the industrial committee and was heavily involved in working out the city's general plan.

"If I've had any influence, it's been that I've been doing a lot of master plan work, not just for the private sector but also for the chamber," he said.

He also served on the West End YMCA's board of directors. He is presently on the Fontana YMCA's board of directors, the Building Industry Association's board of directors, the Route 30 Task Force and the Ontario Airport Access Committee.

His behind-the-scenes work has included assuming the role of mediator between property owners and the cities of Fontana and Rancho Cucamonga to help resolve their dispute over annexation of the Hunt Club from Rancho Cucamonga's sphere of influence into the city of Fontana.

To work out a deal, Dilorio promised not to annex adjacent property he owns into Fontana and secured agreement that development of the Hunt Club property would be subject to Rancho Cucamonga's standards.

"Sometimes the private sector people can act as a go-between between the public sector and private individuals," he said. "Planning and politics sometimes don't mix, but sometimes you have to mix them."

Dilorio's involvement in local politics has been low-keyed according to those in political office and his own characterization.

"I don't like to throw an undue amount of weight around," he said. "I generally support all of the candidates I feel are qualified."

Political figures in the West Valley paint Dilorio as a highly intelligent man, generally low-key in his approach and with a reputation for following through on development requirements set by the cities.

Rancho Cucamonga City Councilmen Chuck Buquet and Jeff King both said that Dilorio was a key player in the city's development, but that he has done it with subtlety.

"I personally think he was very instrumental in terms of the entire concept as it relates to development of the planned community," King said. "He's always been a proponent of high development standards."

Added Buquet, "He has a lot of class. He'll come in here and say 'here's what I want to do, what are the requirements? Now what else can I do?' He's up above board. He doesn't play politics and that's refreshing."

As an example, Buquet said Dilorio maintained standards for developing parks in Victoria that he had already agreed to even though state legislation reduced those standards.

Councilman Dick Dahl concurs with much of Buquet's and King's assessment of Dilorio. But the councilman said he disagrees with the developer's ideas of good housing.

Dahl believes Dilorio is building housing that is too small in the Caryn planned community.

"I think he's acting sometimes more as a businessman and not as much with the community's interest in mind," Dahl said.

Dilorio disagrees, saying that Rancho Cucamonga's housing is generally of a higher standard than other communities and that is what is setting the city apart.

"This whole business of being a developer can be looked at pretty much as just following the (city's) general plan and I've done that," he said.

In Fontana, Mayor Nathan

Simon has been impressed by Dilorio's work in the West End Plan.

"We're really excited about what he's trying to do up there," Simon said. "From all indications he is responsible."

He is very knowledgeable, perhaps in a way that could be persuasive. I understand he has good contacts."

Dilorio says he works 70 hour weeks out of his two homes.

R.C. City Council loans to agency

By Patrick McGreevy

Another $1 million has been loaned to the Rancho Cucamonga Redevelopment Agency by the city, in action last week by the City Council which is the governing board for both the city and the agency.

The debt was incurred by the redevelopment agency so that it may demonstrate debt and receive its annual allotment of tax increment money from San Bernardino County.

The council also authorized City Engineer Lloyd Hubbs to renew the city's request to the Public Utilities Commission to support abandonment of the Southern Pacific's Baldwin Park line through the city.

Council members agreed in requesting and granting the loan Sept. 18 that interest on the loan would be paid at the the prevailing rate on certificates of deposits bought by the city but not to exceed 12 percent.

The 12 percent limitation is provided by state law.

Last week's loan brings to $3 million the amount loaned the redevelopment agency by the city, according to senior redevelopment analyst Linda Daniels.

Daniels said that a redevelopment agency must demonstrate debt equal to what it would receive in property tax money on the new value of property in the city's to pay for the redevelopment agency's administration and project costs.

The first and only other loan of the city to the redevelopment agency was $2 million in the 1982-83 fiscal year. That loan and the loan approved Wednesday will be paid off as tax increment funds are available, Daniels said.

The request for PUC support of abandonment of the Southern Pacific line follows a year of attempting to generate support for the rail line's abandonment with either the railroad or the Interstate Commerce Commission, Hubbs said.

Neither the railroad nor the public agencies have responded with support and railroad officials have urged the city to await the results of a pending merger of Southern Pacific with Santa Fe Railroad.

City officials would like to see the traffic on the Southern Pacific line use the Santa Fe line which runs parallel, east to west through the city.

Hubbs said there would be an $18.5 million financial savings to taxpayers and the railroad from the line's abandonment. The money would be saved in maintenance, repairs and in not having to spend $5 million to install modern, warning devices at 41 roadway crossings. redevelopment project area.

Without any debt, the redevelopment agency would not be entitled to the tax increment money. The loan money is used

Alta Loma High School passes projected attendance figure

By Matt Coker

The huge growth expected opening week at Etiwanda High School just wasn't there, according to recently released enrollment figures.

However, Alta Loma High School, which was expected to experience dwindling enrollment with the establishment of crosstown Etiwanda, came out well above the Chaffey Joint Union High School District's projections.

In a report to the Chaffey Joint Union High School District board of trustees, Superintendent Mike Dirksen said there were 1,500 students enrolled at Etiwanda.

While it is possible more will register in coming weeks, Etiwanda's total enrollment was 44 students shy of the total district officials projected would be on campus by Oct. 16, Dirksen said.

As of Sept. 16, there were 2,314 students registered at Alta Loma, which was expected by October to have 2,229 enrollees — or 85 less than are currently on campus.

Earlier, school officials expected Alta Loma's enrollment to dwindle to the 1,800 to 1,900-student level. The school was designed to hold 1,600 students.

Since there is no room at the school for additional portable classrooms ("Alta Loma is really relocatable out," Dirksen told trustees recently), the board took action to ease overcrowding there.

An enrollment limit of 2,300 students was imposed for Alta Loma. Exceptions for health reasons, approved by the principal and superintendent, would be the only way more students could enroll there, Dirksen said.

The type of residential development currently present in Etiwanda could be the reason enrollment fell short at that school, Dirksen said.

Many of the area's home buyers, he noted, are young families with young children "that will ultimately be ours, maybe not next year or the year after, but sometime down the line."

Likewise, Alta Loma seems to be getting an influx of high school-aged students who live with single parents in new apartment complexes, Dirksen said.

He said many new Alta Loma students already have been given the choice of going instead to Etiwanda or Chaffey

L.A. fair continues tradition as testing ground for products

By ED CAMACHO
Staff Writer

Although nestled among the hundreds of exhibits at the Los Angeles County Fair, Randy McInwain said he isn't surprised when people stop, stare and even chuckle at him.

"We get this kind of reaction at most of the exhibits we attend," said McInwain, lying in one of his Toobie lightweight boats.

"It certainly is an eye-catcher," one observer said of the Toobie, one of the new products being introduced at the county fair.

Among other new products are a folding bicycle, a pool alarm, an easy-assembling tent and a vest that keeps people warm.

While most people won't buy any of the new products, the ingenuity of gadgets always catches attention, said Murial Buller, assistant media coordinator.

"Fairs have been used for centuries to introduce new products to the market," Buller explained. "Both the Frisbee and the Belgian waffle were introduced at the L.A. county fair."

Finding the most unique new products is not difficult, Buller said. "They all have lots of people around them."

OCH to offer $500 health care scholarships

The Ontario Community Hospital auxiliary announces its annual scholarship program for Ontario Community Hospital employees to further their education in the health care field.

Two $500 scholarships will be available. Funds for the program are made possible through proceeds of the Gift Shop, fund-raising projects during the year, and from personal memorial contributions to the Ella Thompson Memorial Fund. Mrs. Thompson was the wife of the first administrator of the local hospital, Sherman Thompson. Originally the fund provided loans without interest. However, the two scholarships are made available with no pay back.

The requirements, briefly, are completion of the application form, three letters of reference, the school program, agreement to obtain a degree or certificate in the chosen field, and an interview by the scholarship committee.

Committee members are Violet Randolph, chairwoman; Nell Haney and Lelia Myrick.

Complexion of Foothill in question

By Patrick McGreevy

Should tire shops and automobile repair businesses be allowed to locate on Foothill Boulevard in Rancho Cucamonga while the city does a study to determine the major roadway's future character?

That was a question that the City Council and Planning Commission could not agree on last week.

The council voted preliminarily to allow the tire and auto repair shops while a comprehensive development policy is drafted for the major thoroughfare during the next 18 months.

The commission had recommended that the tire and auto shops be prohibited from being established during the study period.

In agreeing to revise the planning commission's interim policy, the City Council scheduled action on an ordinance containing the policy for Oct. 2.

The commission and chamber of commerce have been working on the interim guidelines for the street's development for six months but even though the policy is only temporary, some council members and business people say it will likely influence the final policy.

The most controversial portion of the interim policy is a section on land use that bans certain types of new businesses in office/professional and general commercial districts of the study area, which runs from the westerly city limits to Haven Avenue and also includes the stretch of road between the Devore Freeway and East Avenue.

Planning commissioners proposed that the city not allow the establishment of animal care facilities with exterior kennels and pens, automotive repair businesses, cemeteries, contractors' yards, equipment rental yards, ice machines, mini-storage facilities, vehicle and recreational vehicle storage yards, tire sales and service and truck and trailer rental, sales and service.

Businesses that the commission would have allowed if the merchant secured a Conditional Use Permit were carpentry and cabinet shops, drug stores and pharmacies, nurseries and garden supply stores, plumbing shops, second-hand stores, pawn shops and spiritualists.

Councilman Jeff King said that he believes the final policy for Foothill Boulevard will resemble the interim policy and he does not believe automobile repair stores, tire stores and truck and trailer rental, sale and service centers should be prohibited from locating on the boulevard.

"After awhile, none of these places will have anywhere to go," he said. "All of them can be compatible on Foothill."

King made a motion, which was approved on a 4-1 vote, to allow the establishments of automobile repair stores, tire stores and truck repair and sales stores with a conditional use permit.

Councilwoman Pam Wright voted against the motion, saying the reason the commission sought to prohibit those types of businesses while the study was being done is that it did not feel it had adequate guidelines for allowing such businesses. Those guidelines would come with the study, she said.

Councilmen Chuck Buquet and Dick Dahl also expressed concern that prohibiting certain types of businesses already located on the boulevard made existing uses non-conforming and might limit merchants' ability to fix their businesses up or expand them.

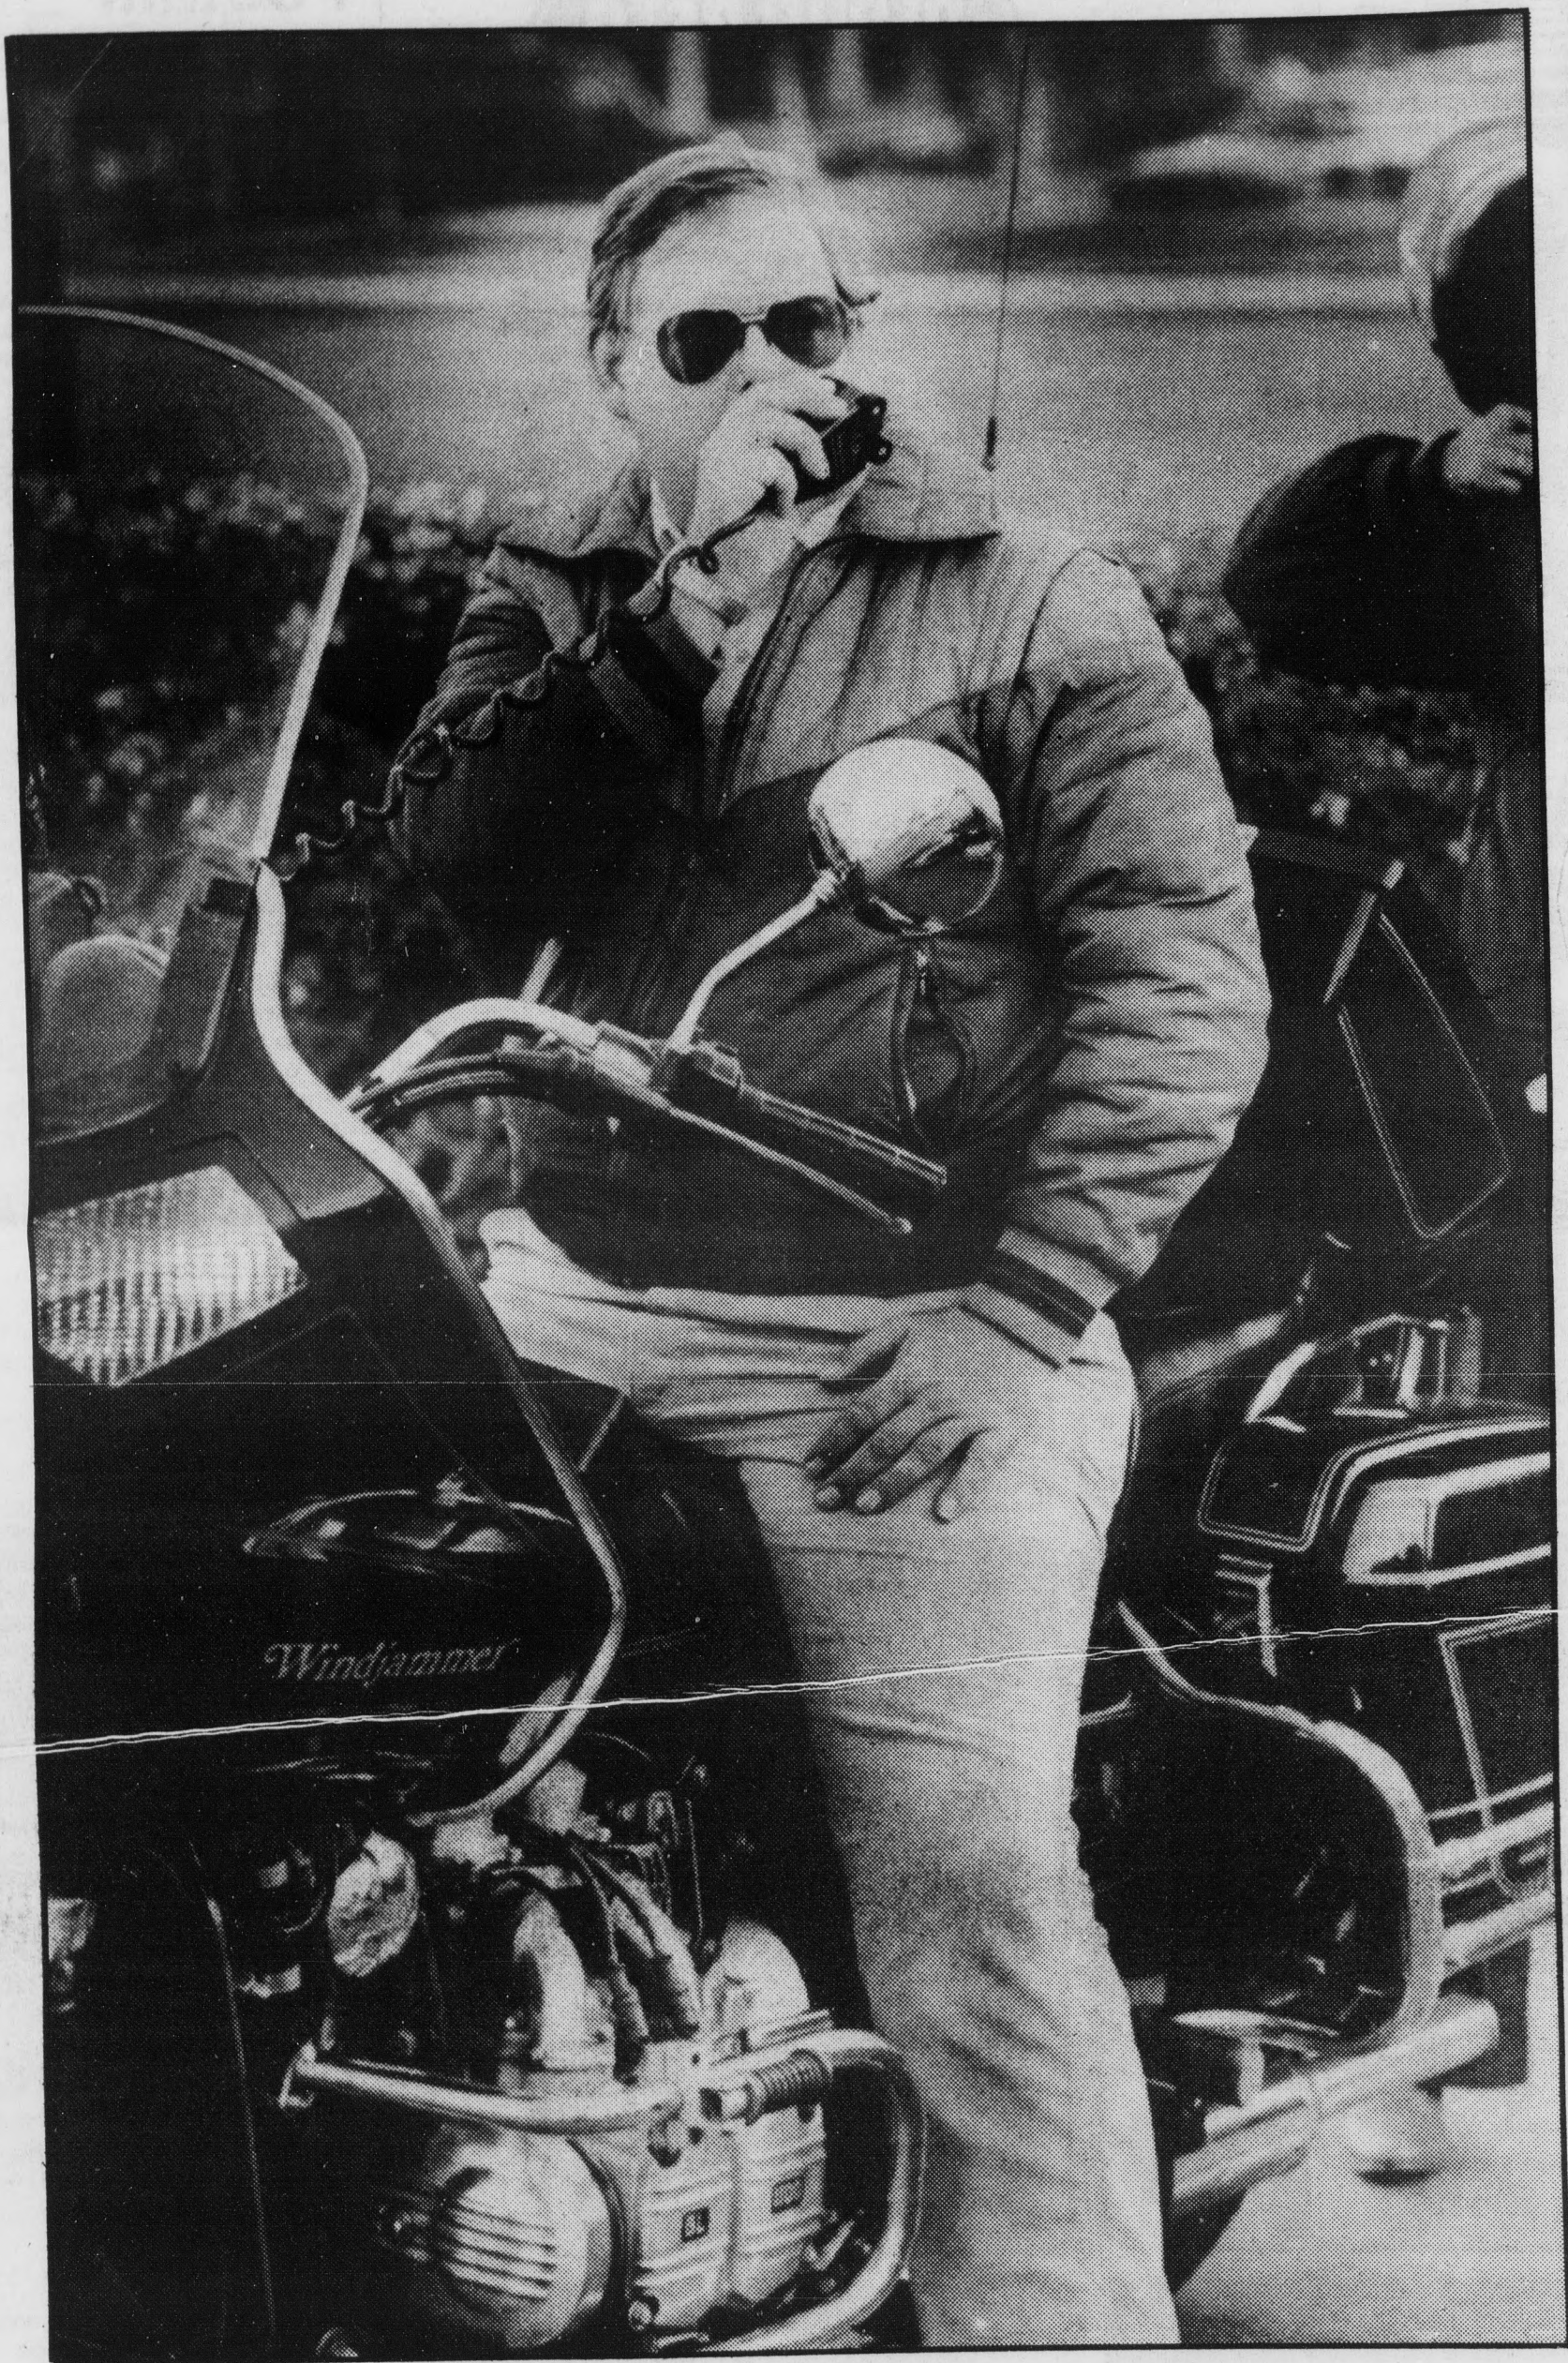

Senior Planner Otto Kroutil said it was the commission's intent to prevent significant renovations of expansions that might give non-conforming businesses many more years of life on the boulevard.

Jim Barton, chairman of the chamber of commerce's economic development committee, said by making certain types of businesses non-conforming uses during the interim period, the city was sending them each a message that their type of business, "is not the best thing on a major boulevard in all cases."

He said that notice would allow merchants to decide whether to invest in improvements or expansion knowing that in the future, after the Foothill Boulevard plan is implemented, they may no longer fit into the neighborhood.

Community development director, Jack Lam, assured the council that non-conforming businesses could expand by securing a conditional use permit.

Larry Bliss, representing A and R Tires, asked the council to be careful not to make limits too restrictive nor require too much landscaping. He said the chamber of commerce's support for the interim policy does not speak for all of the city's businesses.

They glide over the surface on two wheels and move like a squadron in groups of five or six.

Their every move is coordinated by citizens band radio.

Because they enjoy riding their motorcycles together in this formation, they have organized into a group that rides together about once a week.

"It's like being in flight," says Rancho Cucamonga resident Lynn Craycroft, a member of the Inland Empire Chapter of Touring Wings, Inc. "I don't think I got excited about it until I saw a whole bunch of motorcycles riding together."

"We're all overgrown kids," adds her husband, Rich Craycroft.

Riding is a kind of therapy for Touring Wings member Ron Taub. "When I'm riding I can get away far from all my problems. It's a whole lot more fun and a whole lot more cheaper than a psychiatrist," he says.

Most members of the group own Honda Gold Wing motorcycles — big bikes with the same horsepower as a Volkswagen. These are not Hell's Angels or hot-rodding adolescents. All 40 members are 30 years old or over and many are professionals. Six are police officers.

Husbands and wives usually ride together on the bikes. Some even include a sidecar for other family members. "This gives the opportunity for the family to get involved," Craycroft says.

Touring Wings don't find much in common between themselves and the dirty, bearded, leather-jacketed motorcyclist of stereotypes.

"We work very hard to change that image," says Debbie Olsen.

"We're really hung up on safety," says co-founder Paul Read.

Members are required to wear a helmet and eye protection. Drinking alcohol is never allowed.

"We don't drink because drinking and driving don't mix, especially when it's only on two wheels," Craycroft says.

They ride in parallel formation two seconds apart, keeping traffic from between them. The front and rear motorcycles communicate.

Touring on Two Wheels

The front motorcycle gives the signals when a lane change is necessary and the rear motorcycle moves over, what they call "closing the back door." The rear rider notifies the front motorcycle when the lane change is complete. Then the others follow.

"We feel the CB is almost as important as any other equipment you got," Read says. Not only is it necessary to maneuver in formation, but it also comes in handy when there is a breakdown.

When using the CB, the riders have a language all their own.

"I hear you knocking but I don't hear you coming in," says a man, who calls himself "Firefox," over the CB.

Touring Wings, which includes some non-voting members who don't own the Honda Gold Wing bike, participates in overnight camp-outs, beach parties, picnics, and fund-raisers. They have poker runs to raise money.

Twice a year Touring Wings hold fund-raisers for the City of Hope Medical Center in Duarte.

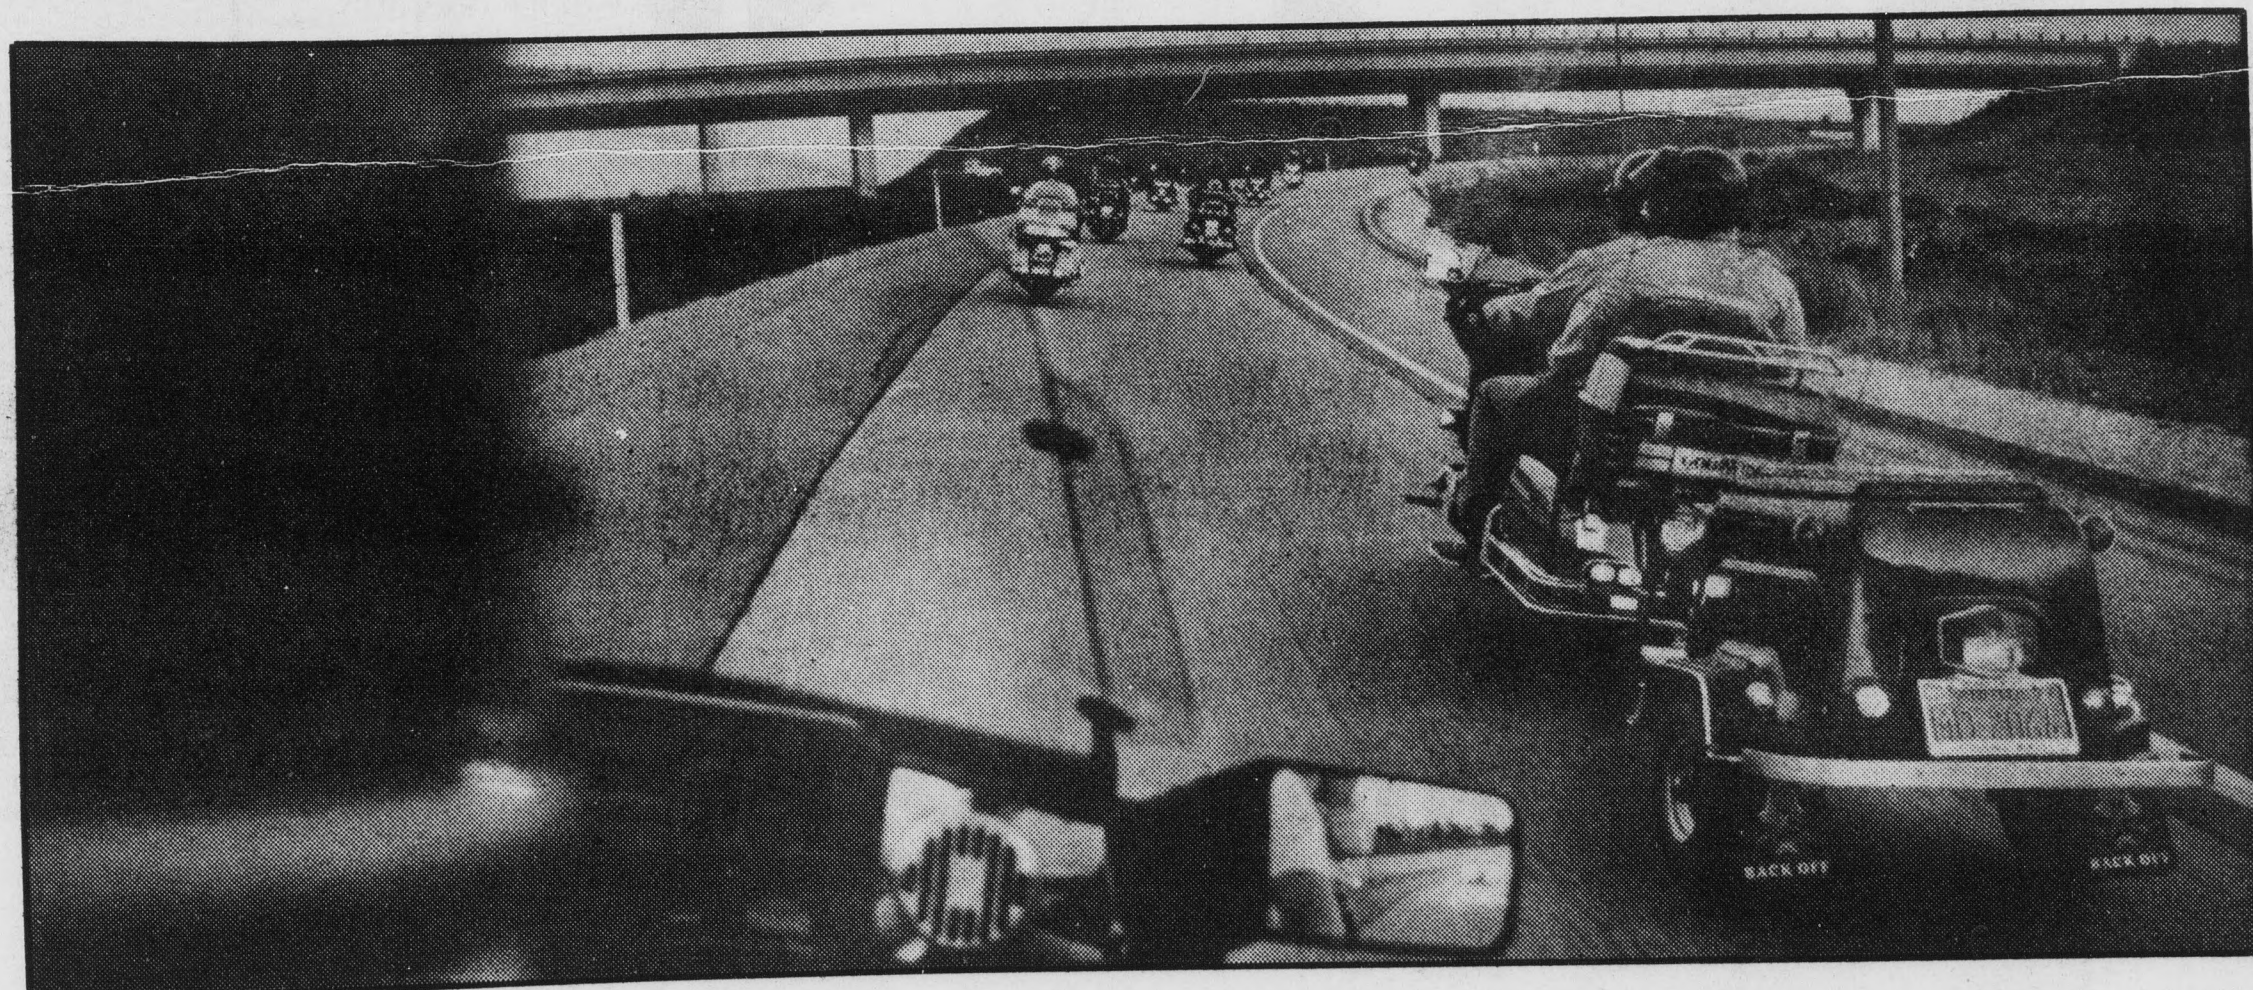

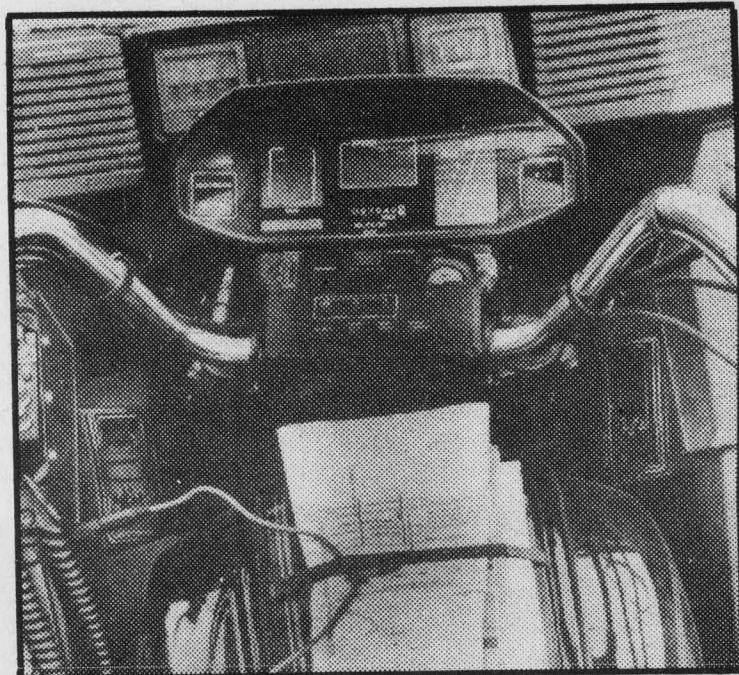

They also get involved with motorcyclists of every ilk in supporting Bikers Against Manslaughter, an organization that defends motorcyclists in litigation involving accidents.

Riders also try to make automobile drivers aware that there are motorcycles on the road. The minds of many drivers are not programmed to see motorcycles, said member T.J. Taylor. That causes a lot of accidents, he said.

The most common accident that occurs between a motorcycle and a car is a car turning left in front of a bike. But there are also people who try to run motorcyclists off the road, the members said. "They don't feel intimidated by a motorcycle so they're more willing to take a shot at you," Taylor said.

"What we're trying to do as a group is to let people know that it's not open season (on motorcycles) anymore," Craycroft said. □ gallon gas tank has been relocated under the rider's seat. Paul Read (above right) checks over final plans before the group leaves on their biweekly pie run. And their off and running (above) in formation on the 10 Freeway.

'Jigsaw man' plot lacks originality

By Bill Hagen
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — The British intelligence network is infested with more moles than my back yard, so it's to be expected that shenanigans in that circle would be a popular source of spy stories.

And since success breeds imitators, it's also to be expected that the quality of such stories would suffer a severe drop. Such certainly is the case with a mundane movie called "The Jigsaw Man," which promises from its stars, Michael Caine and Laurence Olivier, the same kind of electricity they generated together in "Sleuth" but from the outset suffers a power outage.

"The Jigsaw Man" has at least a couple of things working against it almost immediately. One is that any fictional story about double-dealings in British intelligence had best be very clever and intriguing, because the non-fiction stories emanating from that organization periodically definitely are. There are stories of decades of spying for the Soviet Union by men of impeccable backgrounds, men whose loyalty and trustworthiness were never in question, at least not until they defected.

Well, "The Jigsaw Man" isn't very clever. Trite is more like it. And it's hard to drum up much intrigue or suspense about which mole, or double-agent, is at work when there are only two viable suspects.

Caine plays the former director of British intelligence who some time earlier had defected to Moscow, leaving behind in England, as a sort of insurance policy, potentially devastating microfilm filled with the names of fellow Soviet agents.

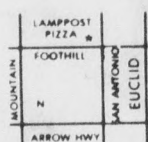

Too many pieces of "The Jigsaw Man" don't fit, too many others are missing.

This Week's Featured Restaurant

SOMETHING NEW IN CALIFORNIA

Italian Beef Stand Chicago Style

It's new, it's delicious, it's The Italian Beef Stand Chicago Style Restaurant and it's located at 8900 Benson Avenue, Montclair.

The Italian Beef Stand Chicago Style serves Scalas preferred beef and sausage along with the Vienna brand Polish sausage and 100% Kosher style hot dog. Both are long time eastern specialties. Shipping directly from Chicago, The Italian Beef Stand Chicago Style has made it possible for the local population to enjoy good food.

Ken Mincheski, owner of the Italian Beef Stand Chicago Style has lived in California only a year now. As Ken explains, "He was unable to find a restaurant featuring Chicago style beef, sausage and Vienna 100% beef hot dog so he opened his own restaurant." With 15 years experience in restaurant business, Ken Mincheski knows the right way to run a restaurant by serving food in a pleasant atmosphere and serving food that tastes good enough to keep bringing the customers back.

Delicious while simple, the menu begins with the Italian beef sandwich, slices of mouthwatering beef stuffed between fresh Italian bread slices. Hot or sweet peppers are available upon request. Tasty and satisfying, it is definitely an original tradition.

The Italian sausage sandwich has remained an eastern favorite because it is good and at The Italian Beef Stand Chicago Style it has the same good flavor.

It is quite possible both sandwiches will compete for your favorite so to make the decision easier, Ken Mincheski offers the combo sandwich, with both Italian beef and sausage. Meatball sandwiches can be appetizing but served at The Italian Beef Stand Chicago Style it is fantastic!

The Polish sausage, the 100% Vienna hot dog and double hot dog are served with mustard, relish, onion, pickle, tomato and pepperoncini. The hot dogs are all 100% beef kosher style. If you're hungry for a hot dog, a good hot dog, they are available at this new Montclair restaurant.

To complete the meal a delicious creamy coleslaw is offered along with a wide assortment of soft drinks.

Luncheon specials offering the delicious food at great savings will be available daily just check the chalk board.

In a hurry? Give them a call and your order will be waiting for you.

The Italian Beef Stand Chicago Style offers a 10% discount to senior citizens and students any time.

Enrollment

High School in Ontario, which also is experiencing unusual growth. Fifteen students already have shifted over to Etiwanda.

Of the district's major campuses, Montclair High School is the only other facility joining Etiwanda in coming up short of the October projected enrollment marks.

There were 2,279 students registered at Montclair Sept. 16. Projections show 14 more will be there by the target date.

Chaffey led the major CJUHSD campuses in total enrollment (2,754 students) and most enrolled above the projection figures (105).

Upland High School, wasn't far behind in enrollment with 2,618 students, but that figure was only 20 pupils more than the total forecast.

Ontario High School had 1,923 registered students, or 87 above what was predicted by October.

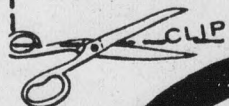

The district's total student population as of Monday, including 986 enrollees in the CJUHSD Adult Education Program, was 14,853.

Action around the goal gets intense at times, like this flurry between Division 3 girls' rivals Blazers and Cal Girls. The Blazers' goalie (striped shirt) was able to make the save, although the Cal Girls posted a 1-0 victory. Action took place on Region 32's opening day of play.

They're off and running. The boys varsity field leaves the starting line at the annual Chaffey District Cross Country meet.

Upland harriers host CHS

Having already scored one Baseline League victory, the Upland High School cross country squad is scheduled to host Chaffey this afternoon.

Coach Bob Loney's Highlanders placed high in the recent Chaffey District Meet last Saturday at Chaffey College. Paced by the first place finish of David Hesselstine, Upland was third in the boys' division with 104 points.

In the girls' division, Upland scored 132 and was fourth. Walnut was the winner in both categories, scoring 40 points on the boys side and 44 for the girls.

Upland will travel Oct. 3 to face Claremont in a dual meet and then go to the Crescenta Valley Invitational on Oct. 5. The Baseline League finals are scheduled for Oct. 31.

Deja vu for new principal at Valle Vista

By Patrick McGreevy

Randy Keeth has had numerous occasions for experiencing deja vu in his career as an educator.

It's a feeling that might overcome him now that he is back in the Central School District as principal of Valle Vista Elementary School.

Keeth previously taught in the school district for 1½ years before taking a job as an assistant principal in the Bonita School District in La Verne.

"I was very happy in this district before, with the administration and the people I worked with," he said. "I'm glad to be back."

While he was away he secured his California administrative credential and put it to use. He comes in as administrator of the 650-student Rancho Cucamonga school with a lot of ideas and excitement about Central's involvement in the "effective school" program.

The program seeks to make schools more effective by having their administrators draft goals and objectives.

Among the goals are making the school a safe and orderly environment, providing clear academic goals for the schools to accomplish and providing instructional leadership, Keeth said.

He began working with the program when he became a principal four weeks ago.

"I'm really excited to be involved in something that well thought-out and planned," he said. "A lot of schools are just now getting involved and this district has been involved for a year already so we're in the forefront."

Keeth is 35 years old, married, has two young children, and lives in Covina.

Returning to the Central School District is not the first occasion of deja vu he has experienced.

Born in Pomona, Keeth attended Roynon Elementary School in the Bonita School District as a child.

So when he was hired by the Bonita district 1½ years ago he became assistant principal of Roynon.

"It was kind of neat, kind of fun, to go back to the school I had graduated from," he said. "Everybody thought it was interesting that a student from the school would come back as an administrator."

"I'd find myself looking out on the playground and imagining how it was when I was out there myself," he said.

The only staff member still at the school from his boyhood days was a secretary who couldn't believe he was back, he said.

Q. Our children recently obtained an orphaned kitten from the local animal shelter. We do not know the exact age or source of the kitten.

For what and when should we have the kitten vaccinated?

A. First, you should ask the authorities at the animal shelter if the kitten was given any medications, vaccinations or anti-parasitic drugs while under their care. They probably can estimate the age of the kitten fairly accurately, or you can ask your veterinarian.

Next you should take your new kitten to a local veterinarian for a complete physical examination and vaccinations. He or she can evaluate the general health of the kitten and check it for both external and internal parasites.

Most veterinarians recommend vaccinating kittens for pauleukopenia (FPL), rhinotracheitis (FVR), calicivirus (FCV), feline pneumonitis (FPN) and rabies. A vaccine against feline leukemia recently became available — your veterinarian can help you decide if this would benefit your cat.

The first injection for pauleukopenia should be given shortly after weaning, as early as 6 weeks of age. Revaccination at two- to three-week intervals until the cat reaches 16 weeks of age often is recommended. This is especially true for kittens in high-risk situations where prior history is unknown.

Vaccines for rhinotracheitis and calicivirus often are combined with pauleukopenia vaccine and given as a single injection. Usually two injections are given, the first at 9 to 10 weeks of age and the second at 14 to 16 weeks.

Generally, rabies vaccines cannot be given to cats younger than 12 weeks. If a kitten is given rabies vaccine before it is 3 months old, it should be revaccinated at approximately 6 months.

All cats should be revaccinated for pauleukopenia, rhinotracheitis, calicivirus, pneumonitis and rabies at 1 year and annually thereafter.

Queens who have not been vaccinated within a year should be given a rhinotracheitis, calicivirus and pauleukopenia booster before being bred. Live virus vaccines should not be given to pregnant queens because of possible harmful effects to the unborn kittens. However, queens not vaccinated before being bred can be vaccinated for many of the harmful diseases of cats if killed vaccines are used.

Booster injections are a good precaution before boarding a cat or taking it to its first show of the year. Pauleukopenia, rhinotracheitis and calicivirus vaccines should be given four weeks prior to any potential exposures.

Vaccines are highly effective in preventing certain infectious diseases of cats. However, failures occasionally do occur, usually due to improper handling and storage of vaccines, incorrect administration of the vaccine or inability of the cat's immune system to respond to the vaccine.

At the Remington Pool Alarm display, promoter Mary Evans said visitors frequently ask, "Why didn't someone think of it before?"

Activated by waves in a pool, the floating alarm can alert parents that a child might have fallen into the pool. An optional remote receiver also can sound the alarm in the home, she said.

"People think it's a great idea. It seems like everyone has heard of someone's child drowning in a pool. I just can't understand why we haven't sold very many," Evans said.

While Evans complained of not enough customers, Bob Lovelace said he was pleased with both interest and sales of the Speedome three-man tent. Lovelace makes a convincing sales pitch by demonstrating how the one-piece nylon tent can be set up in 20 seconds.

"Anyone who has ever wrestled with the family tent can be interested in this tent," Lovelace said. "Even the experienced camper can certainly use it." When rolled up, the tent weighs nine pounds and can be carried by a strap, Lovelace said.

Convenience is also the selling point for the Hon folding bicycle, said promoter Greg Bradford. Invented by a former NASA engineer, the folding bicycle has an adjustable seat, trunk of a small car, Bradford said.

"The idea of a folding bike appeals to a lot of people," Bradford said. "You can stick it in the closet and take it out for Sunday rides."

Leisurely rides also are part of the promotion for the Toobie — a cross between a fishing boat and inner tube. The Huntington Beach company that manufactures the tiny boat advertises it as "giving the fisherman an unfair advantage," said salesman McInwain.

"They just began offering a glass-bottom version. I'll tell you it's a crime. You can see the fish right there," said McInwain.

The Toobie is made of foam-injected fiberglass, wrapped by a B.F. Goodrich truck tire innertube. Weighing 110 pounds with a five-horsepower outboard motor, the small boat can be used in shallow water, McInwain said.

A pink-colored model with a canopy and ice cooler has attracted the most attention by onlookers, McInwain said, who added "Mary Kay bought the first one."

The hottest new product at the fair is the Stay Warm Vest, manufactured by the same makers of the Stay Cool Vest. Jeff Davis, area manager for the Stay Cool Company, said the two vests have become big hits for Mark Buonassissi.

"The response has been very good," Davis said. "In the last couple of days, we have been contacted by the FBI and several police agencies."

The Stay Cool Vest uses an artificial ice substitute in six packets, which can be reused by placing them in a freezer overnight. Davis said the vests are being used by workers at nuclear power plants, firefighters and costumed characters at Knott's Berry Farm.

The vest also can use the heating packets, which Davis said are being used by deep sea divers. "They are very popular with skiers, since you can stay out (in cold weather) much longer," Davis said.

More than shopping for new products, McInwain said people like to discover new ideas.

"These are the things I like to look at," he said. "They're the most interesting."
